EL PRESIDIO DE SANTA BARBARA
STATE HISTORIC PARK

The COWGIRL team went on location to gorgeous Santa Barbara, California, and the El Presidio de Santa Barbara State Historic Park to shoot our December/January gentlemen’s fashion editorial Spirit of the West. We were graciously hosted by the Santa Barbara Trust for Historic Preservation. The Presidio, complete with enchanting chapel, museum and active archaeological site, is a popular California Historical Landmark. Located in the heart of downtown Santa Barbara, El Presidio was built in 1782, and was the last of four military outposts built by the Spanish along the coast of what was then called Alta California, a wilderness frontier.

The Presidio was the seat of government and military headquarters for an area that stretched from present day southern San Luis Obispo County to the Pueblo of Los Angeles. The pueblo or town of Santa Barbara grew around its fortified walls. Padre Junípero Serra blessed the site of the Presidio four years before establishing the Santa Barbara Mission. The early Presidio’s walls were mud and brush. Later, sun-dried adobe bricks supported by a foundation of sandstone boulders would form the whitewashed walls; Los Padres Forest timbers supporting colorful red tile roofs. Though never assaulted by a strong military force, the Presidio was not so lucky in averting the vagaries of Mother Nature, including several devastating earthquakes. Fortuitously, two structures of the original quadrangle still remain, both steeped in early California history; the Canedo Adobe, named for the Presidio soldier to whom it was deeded, and El Cuartel, the family residence of the soldier who was once assigned to guard the western gate.
